PRIVATE GROWTH AUDIT · 29 SEPTEMBER 2026

Kate Anthony, the next chapter

Where your business already wins, where money and reach are slipping through, and what to change first.

For Kate Anthony, Divorce Coach By Evans Ademilua, Large Technologies

You've built something most coaches never reach: a podcast with millions of downloads, a book, a sold-out retreat, and a full ladder of programs. So this isn't a list of what's broken. It's a look at the gaps between those pieces, especially between Instagram and everything else.

I went through your Instagram, every link on your Instagram links page, your program pages and prices, and what shows up in search. Everything below was checked directly on 29 September. The headline: the business is strong, but Instagram is sending people to last month's retreat and has no path to the new one.

What's already working

- ✓ September's Unbreakable retreat sold out at $2,500, and April 2027 is already taking reservations with a six-payment plan.
- ✓ You rank first on search for "high-conflict divorce coach for women". That is a hard position to win.
- ✓ A real price ladder from a $50 book to Premium Coaching, with a membership in the middle.
- ✓ Your email platform is already installed on the site, so capturing more subscribers is a small step, not a rebuild.

PART ONE

What the business is doing today

Six findings, in the order a new visitor from Instagram runs into them.

01

Your bio is still selling a retreat that's over

The third line of your bio says "Sedona Retreat Sept 10–13 | Save your spot 👇". Those dates passed more than two weeks ago, and your own retreat page says September is sold out. A new visitor sees an old event, while the most persuasive fact you have, that it sold out, isn't mentioned anywhere on Instagram.

Bio today: 🌵 Sedona Retreat Sept 10-13 | Save your spot👇
Retreat page today: September 2026 is sold out. Now accepting reservations for April 2027

02

There's no way to tap through to the retreat

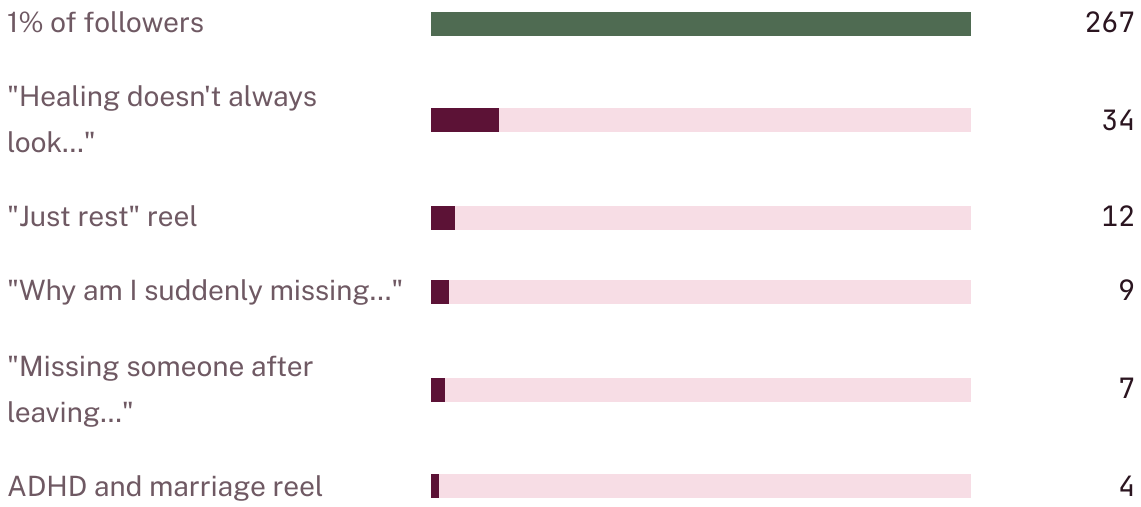

"kateanthony.com/unbreakable" sits in your bio as plain text. Instagram doesn't turn bio text into a link, so it can't be tapped. The only tappable link is your Instagram Links page, and its seven buttons cover the podcast, Phoenix Rising, the Toolkit, The D Word, private coaching and two "start here" pages. The Unbreakable retreat isn't one of them. So "Save your spot 👇" points at a page with no retreat on it.

Also on that page: "Join Phoenix Rising" and "Getting divorced? Start here" both open the same Phoenix Rising page.

03

Instagram reaches a small slice of your audience

Your podcast is the engine of this business. Instagram isn't pulling its weight yet. Across your five most recent posts, likes ranged from 4 to 34 on 26.7K followers. A commonly cited healthy range is 1 to 3% of followers engaging per post.

Likes counted on 29 September 2026. The green bar is what 1% of 26,700 followers would look like.

Comments are also limited on your recent posts. Given the topic, that protection makes complete sense. It does cost reach, though, because comments are one of the main signals Instagram uses to decide how widely to show a post.

04

No free way onto your email list

4.5 million downloads means a huge number of women who already trust your voice. But on your homepage, your podcast "Start here" page and your Should I Stay or Should I Go? page, I couldn't find a free guide, quiz or checklist to join your list. The first thing anyone can get from you is the $50 book. Listeners who aren't ready to buy simply leave, and you can't reach them again.

05

The podcast is hard to find by search

You win "high-conflict divorce coach for women". For the broader search "divorce podcast", the first ten results were The Divorce Podcast with Kate Daly, the Goodpods and FeedSpot "best divorce podcasts" lists, and other shows. The Divorce Survival Guide wasn't on the page, even with 300+ episodes behind it.

06

Small technical items on the site

The homepage's main heading tag is empty, so search engines don't get your headline "High-Conflict Divorce Changes the Rules" as the page's main heading. Sections such as the retreat price and "How it works" fade in only as you scroll, so quick skimmers and some tools see blank space first. And the homepage took about nine seconds to fully load in my test. None of these is urgent. Together they're worth a tidy-up.

PART TWO

What it should be doing

Grouped by what matters most: more visibility, more influence, more money.

More visibility BE FOUND

- [ ] Update the bio today. Replace the September line with "Sept retreat sold out. April 2027 open 👇 ". I've written three ready-to-paste versions for you.

- [ ] Make the retreat the first button on your Instagram Links page: "Unbreakable Retreat · April 29 to May 2, 2027 · September sold out".
- [ ] Turn every podcast episode into Instagram content: one clip reel and one quote carousel per episode, each ending with "full episode in bio". You have 300+ episodes of material.
- [ ] Get on the lists that rank. Ask to be added to the Goodpods and FeedSpot divorce podcast rankings, and trade guest spots with the shows that appear for "divorce podcast".
- [ ] Open comments on educational posts and use Instagram's keyword filters to hide anything hurtful. Keep personal posts limited if you prefer.

More influence BE TRUSTED

- [ ] Say the proof out loud: "4.5M downloads", "New York Times recommended", "retreat sold out" in your bio, pinned posts and at the top of each program page.
- [ ] Share retreat stories. A short post from a September attendee (with permission) will sell April better than any description.
- [ ] Do more collaborations. Your pinned collab with The Happily Never After is a good example. One collab reel a month puts you in front of an audience that already cares about the topic.

More money BE BOOKED

Your ladder is strong. It only needs a free first step and clear links between each rung:

Free · new	A short quiz, "Should I stay or should I go?", that gives a result by email. It feeds straight into your $297 program of the same name.
$50	The D Word
$97	Divorce Strategy Toolkit
$297	Should I Stay or Should I Go?

Monthly	Phoenix Rising, six-month minimum
$2,500	Unbreakable retreat, April 2027
Up to $5,997	Premium Coaching

- [ ] Add an email sequence after the quiz that walks a subscriber up the ladder over two to three weeks: podcast episodes first, then the book, then the matching program.
- [ ] Open an April waitlist with a small deposit option. September sold out, so demand is proven. A waitlist can fill April before you announce it widely.
- [ ] Offer the next rung at checkout: Toolkit buyers see Phoenix Rising, retreat guests see Premium Coaching.

PART THREE

What changes once it's fixed

Instagram starts selling the retreat. Visitors see "sold out" as proof and can tap straight to April.

Your list grows every day the podcast plays. Listeners who aren't ready to buy stay in touch instead of disappearing.

More women find the show through search and podcast rankings, not only through word of mouth.

More revenue from people who already bought once, because every product points to the next one.

A 30-DAY ORDER OF WORK

THIS WEEK

New bio. Retreat as the first link. Merge the two duplicate Phoenix Rising buttons.

WEEK 2

Build the free "Stay or go?" quiz and connect it to your email platform.

WEEK 3

Email sequence up the ladder. April waitlist live. First retreat testimonial post.

WEEK 4

Podcast ranking list submissions. Episode clips on a weekly rhythm. Homepage heading fixed.

Over to you

I promised you a draft of an updated bio, so it's attached with this audit: three versions under Instagram's 150-character limit, plus the new order for your Instagram Links page. Use whichever fits. If you'd like help with any of the bigger pieces, like the quiz and its email sequence or a proper retreat page, I'm happy to talk.
